Distracted Driving Awareness Month

A distracted driving ticket could cost more than just the fine, insurers say

What to Know

- The Washington State Traffic Safety Commission (WTSC) reports that 596 people died from distracted driving between 2017 and 2021. In 2022 distracted driving caused 115 fatalities in Washington state.
- The Washington State Patrol reports that it has contacted or stopped 6,601 distracted drivers so far in 2024, and over 28,000 distracted drivers were stopped in 2023.
- In addition to a fine, having a distracted driving ticket on your record could increase your insurance premium, insurers report.

SEATTLE, WA, April 02, 2024 – Distracted Driving Awareness Month has kicked off with the deployment of high visibility enforcement patrols in certain areas of Washington State from April 1 through April 5. The extra patrols specifically look for and ticket those distracted by cell phones while driving and shine a spotlight on the deadly and costly behavior of distracted driving.

In 2021, distracted driving killed 3,522 people in the United States, according to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA). In 2023, the Washington State Patrol stopped over 28,000 distracted drivers.

Distracted driving is broadly defined as activity that take a driver's attention off the road. Washington State's distracted driving law places tougher restrictions on cell phone use while behind the wheel along with violations for other distractions while driving, such as eating, reading or grooming. And keep in mind, a distracted driving ticket could cost more than just the fine.

“Distracted driving is a public safety and public health issue that destroys lives and damages property, which is of great concern to everyone, not just insurance companies, so we hope drivers are beginning to make better choices when it comes to cell phone use in their vehicles,” said NW Insurance Council President Kenton Brine.

Distracted driving infractions are included in state driving records, which are available to insurance companies. More insurers now report that a distracted driving infraction on your record could increase what you pay for auto insurance, in some cases by as much as 20% or more.

“Whether your own insurance premium will be affected by a citation for distracted driving, and what that impact could be, will vary depending on the circumstances, your overall driving record and on your insurance company and policy,” Brine said. “It’s a good idea to check with your insurance company or agent to find out more about those potential consequences.”

Brine said an informal, non-scientific survey of insurance companies writing auto insurance policies in Washington conducted by the NW Insurance Council suggests that many companies respond to increases in citations and crashes blamed on distracted driving by imposing surcharges or higher premiums for policyholders who are cited for distracted driving – especially if the citation came as the result of a collision. Premium impacts could include the loss of a “good driver discount” plus a 2-4% rate increase, Brine said.

But the potential rate increase could be much steeper, he said, if the citation came in connection with other infractions, like speeding or running a red light, or if it also involved a crash.

“In cases where a collision or other additional violation also occurred along with the distracted driving citation, a policyholder could expect to see a 10-20 percent increase, or more,” Brine said.

All distractions are a reason for concern, but cell phone use while driving is the riskiest distraction for drivers.

In recent years, studies have found a correlation between an increase in auto crashes and distracted driving. As a result, the cost of insurance has increased as well because loss costs – payments made to treat injuries, repair damaged vehicles and property and defend insured drivers in legal actions – have risen.

“The best defense against auto crashes and high insurance costs is simple,” Brine said. “When you’re driving, keep your hands on the wheel, your eyes on the road, and your mind on your driving.”
